Features

18 Commanders with Influence
The governor is the National Guard's peacetime commander in chief, with responsibilities as a leader and as a policy-maker. When a disaster strikes or an emergency arises, the governor relies on the National Guard to answer the call. And when the Guard needs help, it seeks assistance from the governors, who are influencing issues in Washington and inspiring the troops in the field.

24 New Site, Old Address
The NGAUS has redesigned its Web site, updating it with a more contemporary look and easier navigation. New features have been added, without losing any of the information previously available. A search engine has been installed, as well as two new sections, "The National Guard Educational Foundation" and "Working with Industry." Here's a preview.

26 Home Sites
With the recent explosion of new, commercial military Web sites, a vast array of military online resources are at your disposal. Free computer software training, Internet access, e-mail and other useful services and information are available on your home or office computer via the Internet. C'mon along for a tour.

28 Recess in America's Favorite Playground
This year's 122nd NGAUS General Conference promises to be a full house. The National Guard Association of New Jersey has been working hard to pull the conference together and make it memorable. Atlantic City, touted as "America's Favorite Playground," beckons singles, couples and families. There's more to see than just the glitz of the casinos.

It keeps the peace.

In a dominating, intimidating sort of way.

With its advanced surveillance, higher firepower and greater durability, the AH-64D Apache Longbow will more than dominate the 21st century battlefield. It will provide the U.S. Army with a cost-effective way to update its fleet. Most important, it's available right now. So it can better protect our soldiers today and tomorrow.
