

Bradley A3 training— a leap ahead ...

Key to Army 2010 and beyond, the Bradley A3 incorporates advanced digitized systems with software and electronics for enhanced lethality and situational awareness.

Good training is key to soldier performance. But there are never enough ranges, labs, or time to train, until now. The Bradley A3 with embedded "Virtual Range" provides realistic training simulations for the individual or crew. The Army's first integrated platform design revolutionizes training and improves performance. Now you and your Bradley team can realize your full potential with a self-contained, fully interactive, digital simulator — whether you're in the motor pool or deployed in the field.

Features

20 Getting Connected

Technology is changing the way Guard members think about meeting their military obligations. Guardsmen want access to their units anytime from anywhere. See how officials at the federal and state levels are trying to make it happen.

24 QDR

What will it take for the U.S. to maintain military superiority in the coming years? In the face of emerging threats and new challenges the Department of Defense is reexamining its long-time strategy and force structure. Defense Secretary Rumsfeld is hinting that changes are coming, but the future is unclear.

26 A Building Success

The National Guard Memorial has become a symbol of the financial and organizational strength of the NGAUS. Learn the history behind the magnificent and controversial structure that occupies One Massachusetts Avenue, N.W.

30 D-Day Salute

In a small Virginia town, a memorial is dedicated to the thousands of soldiers who gave their lives or lost their innocence on the beaches of Normandy more than 50 years ago. It's a fitting memorial for the community that suffered the highest number of per-capita losses in the nation during World War II.
