

A new pace for the digital age

Key to Army 2010 and beyond, the Bradley A3 incorporates advanced digitized systems with software and electronics for enhanced lethality and situational awareness.

United Defense is changing and fast — our skills and capabilities to produce the world's leading armored track vehicles and shipboard weapons have been vastly expanded. Systems integration, electronics and software development command our attention in pursuit of new technologies for defense. Hybrid electric drive systems and advanced materials will make our products lighter, faster and better able to survive. Setting a new pace... United Defense

16 Eyes on Atlantic City

All eyes were on the New Jersey seaside resort as presidential candidates, state officials and senior military officials illuminated the 122nd NGAUS General Conference. A highly successful trade show boasting more than 300 exhibitors helped to anchor the annual event's festivities.

22 Missioning Possible?

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki addressed the Atlantic City conference, unveiling a plan to team Guard and active-Army combat units called "corps packaging." While providing more focus and better training opportunities, the plan falls short of including Guard division in the nation's war plans. That may come next year.

24 2000 NGAUS AWARDS

U.S. Sen. John Warner headlines the list of 2000 NGAUS Individual and Unit Awards recipients that also includes other elected officials, National Guard leaders, life-saving National Guardsmen, and top Army and Air National Guard units. Most of the awards were presented at the conference.

26 Riggers

The Texas Army Guard parachute-packing shop is protecting the force by ensuring the airborne service members they serve have properly packed and ready-to-go parachutes. Because of a shortage of riggers, this shop has had a marked increase in clientele, servicing units across the Total Force and across the country.
