In the May issue of THE NATIONAL GUARDIAN I had occasion to deal, briefly, with some of the immediate problems confronting the Territorial, the District of Columbia, the Army and Air National Guard, and General Headquarters Command, and mentioned that certain Air National Guard Squadrons were being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force. It is impossible to mention the names of any Air National Guard Squadrons as this is being written because the rotation of units has not been announced, and the names of the units themselves are secret. However, it is possible to state that the National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force.

It must be admitted that it is indeed a heart-breaking experience for any National Guardsman in the field to have his unit stripped of key personnel—perhaps more than 15 percent—although the efficiency of such units will be materially affected and they will not be at full strength if such units were disbanding. In any event, the organization of the United States Air Force will be affected by this. The National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force.

It is to be questioned whether any commander under the circumstances could even venture an explanation or lodge a protest, for after all commanders are in the chain of command and must, of necessity, subscribe to a policy which, rather, as it may be, is for the best interest of the Nation and its security.

The effect of the Rotation Policy has been no more destructive of morale within the units and the organization immediately affected than it has been at the home station. It must be borne in mind that one of the great selling points in the matter of recruitment is the fact that the young and the present and former emergencies has been, “Join your hometown Guard Unit and serve your buddies.” This idea has been lost.

The Regular Army and Marine corps in this country were literally called to active service in order to bolster the forces required for the conduct of the Korean operation, and with this strain the National Guard has lost the greater part of its maturity of service and experience. The National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force.

The National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force. It is impossible to mention the names of any Air National Guard Squadrons as this is being written because the rotation of units has not been announced, and the names of the units themselves are secret. However, it is possible to state that the National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force.

It must be admitted that it is indeed a heart-breaking experience for any National Guardsman in the field to have his unit stripped of key personnel—perhaps more than 15 percent—although the efficiency of such units will be materially affected and they will not be at full strength if such units were disbanding. In any event, the organization of the United States Air Force will be affected by this. The National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force.

It is to be questioned whether any commander under the circumstances could even venture an explanation or lodge a protest, for after all commanders are in the chain of command and must, of necessity, subscribe to a policy which, rather, as it may be, is for the best interest of the Nation and its security.

The effect of the Rotation Policy has been no more destructive of morale within the units and the organization immediately affected than it has been at the home station. It must be borne in mind that one of the great selling points in the matter of recruitment is the fact that the young and the present and former emergencies has been, “Join your hometown Guard Unit and serve your buddies.” This idea has been lost.

The Regular Army and Marine corps in this country were literally called to active service in order to bolster the forces required for the conduct of the Korean operation, and with this strain the National Guard has lost the greater part of its maturity of service and experience. The National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force.

The National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force. It is impossible to mention the names of any Air National Guard Squadrons as this is being written because the rotation of units has not been announced, and the names of the units themselves are secret. However, it is possible to state that the National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force.

It must be admitted that it is indeed a heart-breaking experience for any National Guardsman in the field to have his unit stripped of key personnel—perhaps more than 15 percent—although the efficiency of such units will be materially affected and they will not be at full strength if such units were disbanding. In any event, the organization of the United States Air Force will be affected by this. The National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force.

It is to be questioned whether any commander under the circumstances could even venture an explanation or lodge a protest, for after all commanders are in the chain of command and must, of necessity, subscribe to a policy which, rather, as it may be, is for the best interest of the Nation and its security.

The effect of the Rotation Policy has been no more destructive of morale within the units and the organization immediately affected than it has been at the home station. It must be borne in mind that one of the great selling points in the matter of recruitment is the fact that the young and the present and former emergencies has been, “Join your hometown Guard Unit and serve your buddies.” This idea has been lost.

The Regular Army and Marine corps in this country were literally called to active service in order to bolster the forces required for the conduct of the Korean operation, and with this strain the National Guard has lost the greater part of its maturity of service and experience. The National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force.

The National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force. It is impossible to mention the names of any Air National Guard Squadrons as this is being written because the rotation of units has not been announced, and the names of the units themselves are secret. However, it is possible to state that the National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force.

It must be admitted that it is indeed a heart-breaking experience for any National Guardsman in the field to have his unit stripped of key personnel—perhaps more than 15 percent—although the efficiency of such units will be materially affected and they will not be at full strength if such units were disbanding. In any event, the organization of the United States Air Force will be affected by this. The National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force.

It is to be questioned whether any commander under the circumstances could even venture an explanation or lodge a protest, for after all commanders are in the chain of command and must, of necessity, subscribe to a policy which, rather, as it may be, is for the best interest of the Nation and its security.

The effect of the Rotation Policy has been no more destructive of morale within the units and the organization immediately affected than it has been at the home station. It must be borne in mind that one of the great selling points in the matter of recruitment is the fact that the young and the present and former emergencies has been, “Join your hometown Guard Unit and serve your buddies.” This idea has been lost.

The Regular Army and Marine corps in this country were literally called to active service in order to bolster the forces required for the conduct of the Korean operation, and with this strain the National Guard has lost the greater part of its maturity of service and experience. The National Guard is being called to active service in order to free up personnel and equipment for the active service Air Force.