The 92d Congress will be asked to act on a number of legislative proposals which those of us concerned with the strength and readiness of the National Guard consider essential. Those proposals are strongly oriented towards manpower procurement and retention. It will become increasingly difficult to attract and hold capable men and women, in adequate numbers, as the "Zero Draft" concept is implemented. The transition from Draft-motivated to voluntary recruitment has barely commenced and already, the complexity of the problem is becoming apparent.

We will need some solid incentives, to supplement our own energetic recruiting and retention efforts. We have proposed such measures as:

- Re-enlistment bonuses
- Commencement of Title III retirement pay at age 55, with reduced annuity.
- Survivor benefits for widows of Guardsmen who qualify for retirement benefits, then die before actual payments start.

The experience of the Active Forces with inducements like these has shown that they are both effective and economical. It is much less costly to keep a trained man for a longer term by paying a re-enlistment bonus, for example, than it is to train a new recruit. Moreover, it elevates the service level, and thus the combat-readiness, of the Guard.

The time has come to extend such long-service incentives as these to the National Guard and other Reserves.

The need for additional full-time Technicians in both the Army and Air National Guard has become clearly evident. New, more complex equipment has started to flow into the Guard at long last in sizeable quantities. Without proper maintenance, it not only cannot be utilized to enhance readiness training, but will deteriorate rapidly.

The present Technician work force is limited to 42,500. Army and Air combined, by a statutory ceiling. That segment of the force assigned to maintenance duties was only barely sufficient before the influx of new equipment commenced.

We have urged Congress to remove the arbitrary ceiling and have received assurances that the Pentagon will support our proposal.

An effort also will be made to obtain an amendment of the Technicians Act of 1968, to grant full credit for all past Technician service toward Civil Service retirement.

These are the most important of our legislative goals. Your Association and its highly competent Headquarters staff will make a major effort to achieve those goals. But the Association and its staff cannot do the job alone. It must have active support from National Guardsmen in every State.

Associations like ours perform a vital function. We focus attention on the most critical issues. We make the needs of the Guard known in the right quarters at the right time. We document not only the Guard's needs, but the justification for those needs, through the professional efforts of our staff in such fields as planning, research, preparation of factual material, and Congressional liaison.

At the seat of Government, however, our words are needed and our appraisals accepted only to the extent that they reflect the legitimate needs and desires of National Guardsmen at the lower, working levels. It is your voice that must be heard if our objectives are to be attained.
